

"After going to every single salon on the boulevard, I think I found a new home for my curls," one happy NaturallyCurly.com client raved about Capella Salon.

At Capella Salon, the approach to curls is simple: stop trying to make them do something that doesn't come naturally. Instead, the stylists teach their clients how to make their curls look their best.

"We know how to make your curls look good," says Shai Amiel, who opened Capella in 1995 with his wife, Nicole. "But we take great pride in teaching you how to duplicate these looks. I love watching my clients do their own hair. I always learn new tricks from them and end up using them in my own techniques.

With some of the most advanced hair stylists and skin-care methods, the salon is dedicated to offering unparalleled styling techniques along with the most current technologies. At Capella, the stylists treat each curl as an individual that works together with others to create a beautiful style.

"We believe that each curl should be cut individually and dry," Shai says. "This way, we can see what the curls want to do, and we can trim them properly."

Capella Salon, recently featured in Cosmopolitan and Health magazines, has undergone a complete remodel to better serve its clientele. The salon features shiatsu shampoo chairs as well complimentary Starbucks coffee drinks, champagne, mimosas and wine.

The salon features products by Devacurl, Kerastase and Davines.
